Syriac between AD 685 and AD 690 after the Arab conquest of the Middle East. It was swiftly translated into Greek and from that may, according to Möhring, have been translated into Latin before AD 711 and the Arab conquest of Spain. The text is famous for both its polemical attacks on the 'sons of Ishmael' (Arabs) and the loose-living of Syrian Christians.

Although relatively little known today the Apocalypse of the Pseudo-Methodius was the equivalent of a bestseller of its day. Supposedly written by a fourth century Christian holy man called Methodius, the text was likely composed originally in Syriac around 690-92 CE based on various other similar texts.
